

Releases of offenders December 2011 - December 2015
 Updated March 8, 2016

The Washington Department of Corrections today released the names of offenders whose cases have been reviewed and verified through two reviews and a quality assurance process.

The department's review started with the most recent release of an offender potentially affected by the sentencing error, beginning in December 2015, and has worked backward in time. The DOC is doing manual calculations to determine:

- Which offenders were released, and still owe time on their sentence;
- Which offenders were released, but no longer owe time because he or she was eligible for day-for-day credit during time spent in the community and no longer owes time; and,
- Which offenders never owed time, have fully completed their sentences and no additional review is necessary.

This document lists 1,530 offenders dating back to December 2011 who have gone through a manual review by DOC staff to determine their status. Out of that number, approximately 8 percent, or 116 releases, have been determined to still owe time and have had an arrest plan initiated. Approximately 66 percent, or 1,015 releases, no longer owe time because he or she was eligible for day-for-day credit during time spent in the community and no longer owes time. Approximately 26 percent, or 399 releases, never owed time, have fully completed their sentences and no additional review is necessary.
